After having spent several years composing musical scores and voicing them, I realized I can use my computer to create various styles of music. This is also a great opportunity to learn the basic principles of graphics, music and sound. Using the tools provided by Microsoft Visual Studio (MSVS) and the Framework Designer (NSTM), I use the Silverlight Toolkit to create and place different elements that form a specific style. I use this source to create various forms of music such as Techno, Swing, House, Progressive and many others. Each one has its own style and characteristics. The source code is free and includes a tool that allows you to create each part of the composition (score) for yourself, then arrange them to have a better and personal view of them. You can modify, adjust or download the entire source code at any time (also available for other licenses), or you can just download the files, create your own project and customize it to your taste (also for non-commercial use).
