KEEPGUID Description: The KEEPGUID utility is a simple utility that uses the information on a network computer to get the user-specific public key (GUID) of a private key, thus allowing the application using it to use the private key to sign and/or decrypt a document. It allows you to protect data sent by any application (Word, Outlook, Outlook Express, etc.) against unauthorised access, using any system-installed public key, by providing you with a matching private key. The utility uses the public key information that appears in the registry of the computer on which it runs. It provides you with the public key directly, without requiring you to have the corresponding private key. It can send you the message authentication code (MAC) of the key that it found, so that you can make sure the public key was really used for its purpose, i.e. to sign or decrypt a document.
