The Rinzo XML editor is a multi-faceted tool designed to allow simple editing of an existing XML file. With Rinzo, you are not restricted to a traditional file-based approach to document editing. Instead, you can save, view, edit, convert and send an entire XML document to email in seconds. In a sense, the Rinzo XML editor works by automating the complexities of XML document structure.

HTTP Server Description: The HTTP server application is a simple console application that listens on a port, accepts requests, and responds with the requested content. It may be used as an HTTP proxy.

XML Diff Editor Description: The XML Diff editor is a small application designed to make it possible to quickly edit and compare two different XML documents.

Ask HN: Pricing for web service? - ifesdjee

Hi there, for a while now I'm thinking to develop an application. I'm an developer. Why? 1) I want to get some money out of it! 2) I think I have great ideas to serve that money :) 3) If I do it, I want to see how I can offer that to other people. The problem is how much I should charge for my web service. Of course I think it should be cheap, but I want to see how the price I set is for now. Do you know how to set the price of web services? ===== zachlatta

The first thing you need to do is figure out what the product you're selling is. Take a look at something like PayPal or Dwolla and see how they're doing it.

1) What's your risk? If you're a startup, there's a lot of risk involved. If you charge a flat fee, you could run out of money really quickly and have to shut down. If you're talking about putting your servers at risk, you're going to want to make sure you're aware of the risk involved in that.

2) How are you planning to scale? The market for your product is pretty small. You'll either be limited to serving a very small pool of customers, or you'll be limited in terms of what you can offer and have to give away a lot. It's best to make sure that you understand what your limits are and know what
