Intellivision - Labyrinth System Description: Intellivision: Labyrinth System is a platform game developed by TechnicSoft (a division of Atari) in 1984 for the Intellivision. Labyrinth System consists of three titles: Labyrinth, Labyrinth II, and Labyrinth III: The Labyrinth of Time. The Labyrinth system takes advantage of the custom game console's high-resolution graphics to emulate the visuals of the arcade version of Taito's Darius and Sega's Qix, which were released in 1982 and 1983. According to Atari's official website, "TechnicSoft's ability to faithfully recreate the arcade versions of Darius and Qix had a huge impact on the design of Labyrinth System". The back of the Intellivision manual contains a list of the differences between the two arcade versions.

Gameplay The player's objective in Labyrinth is to guide the protagonist through a maze in order to find a way out. The maze is often a series of connected rooms with a number of obstacles in the way. In order to navigate the maze, the player must use an in-game toolbox that contains a hammer, a hook, and a laser pointer. Additionally, the player is able to find a number of items, such as keys, torches, and a magnet. These items are used to unlock doors or to move objects around the maze. The main characters are two male ninjas who are able to fight against monsters using techniques inspired by kung fu cinema. One of the two ninjas is armed with a katana (which could be upgraded to a shuriken, a kunai, and later a ninja star) and the other ninja uses a ninja throwing star. The main character can carry a katana (which can be upgraded to a kunai) and a small backpack. The backpack can hold the items needed to enter certain rooms and solve puzzles. By holding the controller's fire button, the player will turn off the handheld's screen so the player can concentrate on searching for the keys needed to 1d6a3396d6
