1) Filters Filter: Filters allow users to alter the appearance of any or all parts of the image. In this article, we will go over the list of filters available in Elements. 1.1 – Add Noise Add Noise adds random noise to an image. The noise level can be changed. Original: Result: 1.2 – Add Vignette Add Vignette adds a subtle darkening of the edges of the image. Original: Result: 1.3 – Color Correction Color Correction colorizes or desaturates an image. You can also adjust the amount of each color in an image to give it the perfect color. Original: Result: 1.4 – Colorize Colorize puts a color around or inside the image. This color can be different from the main color of the image, or the same as it. The color of the inner circle can also be changed. Original: Result: 1.5 – Edge Detection Edge Detection can be used to detect edges in an image. In the previous screenshot, we can see that the original is highly detailed, but the image looks messy. By adding the Edge Detection filter, we can smooth out the edges and make the image a bit less detailed. Original: Result: 1.6 – Emboss Emboss adds a slight three-dimensional feel to an image. Original: Result: 1.7 – Grayscale Grayscale takes the image to grayscale. Original: Result: 1.8 – Lighten/Darken Original: Result: 1.9 – Level The Level filter adjust the brightness level of the image. Original: Result: 1.10 – Posterize Posterize converts an image to a black and white image. Original: Result: 1.11 – Posterize Posterize can also be used to add a sense of depth. Original: Result: 1.12 05a79ccff

Phototoxin-induced polarization and permeability changes in giant epithelial cells. Nuclear fluorescence polarization has been measured in human synovial cells and giant epithelial cells of the ciliate Paramecium caudatum treated with rhodamine 123, a cationic, lipophilic fluorescence probe. Experiments performed on synovial cells reveal that the fluorescence emission is rapidly (10 s) and reversibly reduced to about 75% of the initial level by the addition of 6 microM of the phototoxin, tenofovir (TFV, S-ten-guanidine acetate). The time course of the decrease of polarization is similar to that observed for the phototoxicity of this compound. These results are fully compatible with the view that phototoxin exerts its toxic effects on cells by specific damage of the cell membrane in the areas of the photosensitizer's accumulation. By contrast, fluorescence polarization measurements performed on P. caudatum epithelial cells, treated with 100 microM of TFV for 5 min, are characterized by a subtle and transient alteration in polarized fluorescence. This change in polarization seems not to be caused by specific membrane damage since all the sensitizer is still localized in the photosensitized areas after 15 min and viability tests performed on TFV-treated cells show that there is no loss of membrane integrity. However, the fluorescence polarization signal is only partially recovered by washing the cells with fresh medium. This result suggests that the hyperpolarization of the fluorescence may have also a photochemical origin. After the first test releases went out and received very little attention, Fedora developers are now sticking to the middle of the road - they don't release it too early, but they don't try to publish it after the end of the normal development cycle. The rough rule of thumb is that a release is considered stable enough for use when it's a stable code base. If it's still in development, then it might as well be considered a beta. I like Fedora - but I do have to agree with the previous poster.. However, I will say that it is one of the ONLY distros that won't allow you to customize your desktop the way you want it. Compiz is only built into the netbook edition. They don't even allow you to get compiz-fusion. They make it seem like they want it to be simple...but simple doesn't always mean best IMHO.
