The concept of chess. Human chess.chess.chess board.chess game.chess rules.chess games.chess.chess pawn.chess pieces.chess rook.chess king.chess game appThe present invention relates to an X-ray, electron and proton beam irradiation apparatus, and more particularly to an X-ray, electron and proton beam irradiation apparatus which takes radiation damage in normal operation of the apparatus, or is in a state of irradiation, and is capable of protecting an object to be irradiated from the radiation damage. When an object such as a cancerous tumor is irradiated with a low dose of X-ray, electron beam or proton beam, the object is called an X-ray, electron beam or proton beam irradiation object. When the irradiated object is a human body, the object is called a living body. When the X-ray, electron beam or proton beam is irradiated to the living body, an amount of absorbed dose of the living body has to be controlled by accurately controlling an irradiation time or irradiation dose. Particularly, when the irradiation is performed as a cancer treatment, there is a need to accurately control an amount of irradiated dose in order to avoid irradiating a non-treated portion of the cancerous tumor. For this purpose, a practical and accurate amount of irradiated dose has to be determined by accurately controlling the irradiation time or the irradiation dose. In order to accurately irradiate the X-ray, electron beam or proton beam to the X-ray, electron beam or proton beam irradiation object, not only a radiation emitter (X-ray, electron beam or proton beam generator) and the X-ray, electron beam or proton beam irradiation object have to be accurately aligned, but also a control for accurately adjusting the amount of absorbed dose is required. However, when the X-ray, electron beam or proton beam is irradiated to the living body, a significant amount of energy (1400 keV to 150 keV of X-ray) is lost into heat. The heat has adverse effects on the living body and normally, the living body is damaged and can not be used.

.0 Profile Stats Player Level: 35 [classical or 3N] My games have been unsatisfactory. But I'm fighting through it with tremendous dedication and willpower. I get these influxes of motivation. It was starting to go downhill when I attended the U.S. national championship in Maryland in 1991. That episode left a lasting bad taste in my mouth. It was a sad tournament for me. I'm glad I did not play it. In the early 1990s, I gave up World Champion (British?) David Howell for a good game. So I probably have the best record of top-flight games I lost during that period of time. I'll never forget David's wife during post-game celebratory dinner. She screamed for everybody to "shut up and eat!" (because her ethnic reticence was not very acceptable in 1990s American culture!). Deplorable choice of words, I know. There's no denying that David did play in the 1992 Olympiad in Barcelona, despite its paradoxical order of events. And I've left out little stuff that I did so that the focus stays on my chess (if I ever achieved any chess). I can literally show any person why I'm the #1 classical or 3N player in the world. But I'm leaving it out. After all, what's the point of a blog entry if I haven't been playing any new games? So I will turn my attention back to FICS. Here are some of the things that might have bothered me when I had to sacrifice my hot/cold sensations to attain my purist stats. 1) Though I had this great plan in the FICS to download my games, finally I decided to abstain. Yes, I did have the games on me when I traveled on the road. But the idea of connecting to WiFi to suddenly have high confidence in the integrity of somebody else's website - well, that would be just like invite the virus to enter my PC. When I was sick of my lousy stats, I offered myself on KeySearch, where my boss said I should manage the site. That sounded wonderful, since I still enjoyed cross-stacking, and I'm sure I could still do it. Eventually, though, I stopped playing on KeySearch, even though the numbers were getting better. After all, there is
