Path Duplicate the background layer of an image by clicking on the Layer button in the top left of the layers palette. Double click in the duplicate background layer to unlock it and move it around the document. You can resize the duplicate layer by clicking and dragging its corner or by right-clicking on the layer and selecting Resize Layer. You can change the colors of the duplicate layer to make it lighter or darker, blur it, change its blending options, add an effect, add a stroke or a fancy border around its outer edge. You can even add a mask to control its opacity. Color Picker You can change the colors of any of the layers by clicking on the layer in the layers palette, then click on the Color Palette in the top right. You can use this palette to change the hue, saturation, value and color temperature of any image or graphics on any layer or layers in the image. You can also change the foreground and background colors of any selected object by selecting them in the Layer or Color Palette. You can select the Fill and Color box to change the color of the currently selected object. You can drag any color you like into the box. The box is dynamic, so you can change its color as you drag. If you only want to change the base color of an object, select it in the Layer or Color Palette and then use the Fill and Color box to change the base color of the object. You can also select the Background Color or Foreground Color box to change the background or foreground color of the layer. You can change all of the colors of the layer, or just the foreground or background colors by clicking on the Layer button in

Q: Can we use the same DataReader over and over on different rows/records I am using a DataReader in C# and I have a procedure in the DB that is returning a row. I have a lot of records to process and the reader is slow. I am not sure if I can use the reader on more than one record at the same time. I am using the following code to fetch the reader in C#: myCommand.CommandType = CommandType.StoredProcedure; SqlParameter parameters = new SqlParameter("@id", txtId.Text); SqlDataReader myReader = command.ExecuteReader(); while (myReader.Read()) { // process some code here that retrieves data from another procedure } I am wondering if what I have here is ok. I can handle it by using the while loop, and then read in the next row before I use the previous one. However, I would like to know if I can use the DataReader for each row, then I just need to call command.ExecuteReader() and it will read each row in the order that was specified. I am not sure if it is safe to do this, as I am processing these rows. My hope is that I can use the reader until I have processed all the records that are returned by the reader, then just keep the next one and use it. A: The reader will close itself (the instance that you created) when you go out of its life scope. In your case: the execution of ExecuteReader(). Try calling using using before the reading. using (SqlDataReader myReader = command.ExecuteReader()) { while (myReader.Read()) { // process some code here that retrieves data from another procedure } } In most of the time it will be enough. If this is not, then I would recommend to keep a list of open readers. public static List OpenReaders {get; set;} .. using (SqlDataReader myReader = command.ExecuteReader()) { if (!OpenReaders.Contains(myReader)) {
