Download The Sims 4 PC FULL Game [Activation Code 2.5.2] GR Game [Full Free Version]Q: Accessing Doxygen generated html file from Python I have built a doxygen documentation project and when it runs I have generated an html file (the documentation itself) containing links to the files in my project. What I would like to know is the best way to access the html file from Python (using Python's built-in website framework or something similar)? It would be really helpful to be able to include the html with my rest of documentation files rather than storing the document locally. A: You can build html from the doxygen output using pydoxygen.buildhtml(...) Now: >>> import pydoxygen >>> pydoxygen.buildhtml('output/example1.html') You can also just open the file directly: >>> import sys >>> pydoxygen.buildhtml(sys.argv[1]) Q: How is this quine constructed? In Python, where the eval() function allows you to evaluate code, we see this problem: >>> x = [1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7] >>> len(eval('''[x]''')) 6 When you run eval(), it evaluates the literal, which is how the code is constructed (look at the beginning of the output). How is it that the length is 6? A: >>> x = [1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7] >>> len(eval('''[x]''')) Becomes >>> [x] [1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7] >>> len([x]) 6 A: eval('''[x]''') is a function call to the list constructor of the class [x] which returns a list with the list x as its only element. The [x] is a list literal, which itself evaluates to a list in the current environment. A technique for sutureless edge-to-edge mitral valve repair.
