"They made it clear that these two fundamental issues, an attack on the American worker and an unfair tax code, are at the core of their vision for America, and it is this contrast of ideas, rather than a proxy battle among the party's elite, that will determine the Republican nominee and the direction of our nation," she said in the statement. In contrast, the Republican debate was a slap fight between the front-runner Donald Trump and the three candidates who followed him in the polls. Marco Rubio acknowledged that the economy is struggling, but argued that President Obama won re-election in 2012 because of "gifts" to middle-class families. "We have to get this economy moving again, and we've got to do it for people who don't have a Ph.D.," the Florida senator said. "That's what I've been saying for weeks." Trump, who leads in the race for delegates, had a message for Rubio. "Your lips are moving, but your ideas are garbage!" Trump tweeted after the debate. "We are in the midst of the single biggest jobs crisis in the history of our country. You are toxic." In the Republican debate, Trump was given a tough opening question by moderator Megyn Kelly. "Mr. Trump, you've been good. You're a newcomer here. You've risen quickly. And you have said recently that you don't need super-PAC money. That must be nice," Kelly said. "But $100 million of secret money from Wall Street and the insurance industry is just not going to do it." The New York real estate mogul responded by calling out former President George W. Bush. "Hey, George Bush, you know, he's got some money. How's he doing?" Trump said to the audience's applause. "He was a disaster. He was an absolutely terrible president," Trump said. "He did 6d1f23a050
